

Long Answer Question (6 marks)

Higher

The platypus is an animal that lives in Australia. It produces milk for its young, but lays eggs. This means it is placed in its own sub-class within the mammals.

Explain how organisms are usually classified, including why this is important and explain why classification may change. [6]

- The quality of written communication will be assessed in your answer to this question.

Long Answer Question (6 marks)

Foundation

The platypus is an animal that lives in Australia. It produces milk for its young, but lays eggs. This means it is placed in its own sub-class within the mammals.

Describe how living things are usually classified. Write about the five Kingdoms and explain why it is difficult to classify some organisms. [6]

- The quality of written communication will be assessed in your answer to this question.